“It's so easy to create a site to help guide students along with projects. I have found that it's a good way to make handouts available to students - I just point them at the web address. I post links to my PBworks.”

Welcome back

A website run by the students, for the students

This wiki is on vacation for the summer. There may be some cleaning out of the old material of the wiki into two physically separate (or is it virtually separate?) areas, one for students and one for issues. If you're interested in having your own classroom wiki, feel free to look around this one. It v others can benefit from seeing some of the applications found herein. If you have any questions, pl

What's a wiki? I'm glad you asked. A wiki is an online document, a webpage, that can be edited in our classroom. It means that each of you have the privilege and responsibility of making the someone else's work (other than basic spelling/grammar) without asking them.

Note to public-
This is a website that evolves under the care and efforts of an entire classroom of gradeschool st site is to encourage students to take responsibility for authorship and to push themselves to cor correct any incorrect information that I find, as well as make suggestions for editing, style, orgar effectively their website.

Parents-
If you do happen to spot problems of a more serious nature (before I do) please let me know immr. -Mr. Lindsay

Templates designed with teachers in mind
